4. French regulations governing import license administration hamper Chinese export-importers seriously. In Haiphong, Chinese shopkeepers are permitted to import but five sewing machines apiece per year. Machines are Swiss-made and sell well in Indochina.

5. The religious practices of Chinese domiciled in Indochina are mixed. Most have no religious preference, and for all practical purposes, are without religion. There are a few practicing Buddhists, and (proportionately) still fewer Chinese Buddhist Temples. Many of the practicing Buddhists attend Vietnamese Buddhist Temples. French (Roman) Catholic missionary activity has attracted a modest number of Chinese, and Catholic schools have Chinese children attending. A number of Vietnamese missionaries have developed a blending of Buddhism and Christianity which they offer to both: Chinese and Vietnamese residents. Perticipation in the Cacdaist movement is not evident among the Chinese population in Indochina.
